Country-English is no longer her style

Rachel Hunter, the New Zealand-born model-actress who posed for the "Sports Illustrated Swimsuit 2003 DVD" and is a pundit on the ABC-TV talent show "Are You Hot? The Search for America's Sexiest People," has sold her Beverly Hills-area home on 1.2 acres of park-like grounds for slightly less than its $2.95-million asking price.

Hunter, 33, had owned the house since she separated from rock star Rod Stewart in 1999 after eight years of marriage. The Country English-style home was formerly owned by actor Shadoe Stevens and leased by Roseanne.

The house, reached by way of a long driveway behind gates, has four bedroom suites and a maid's quarters in 4,500 square feet. Built in the '50s and later renovated, the house opens onto a pool and a tennis court.

Hunter reportedly moved into a nearby $2.4-million home with seven bedrooms, a gym, a spa and a sports court.

Anthony Marguleas of A.M. Realty represented the buyer, a businesswoman. Asher Dann and Tatiana Moleva-Rouchon of Coldwell Banker, Beverly Hills, had the listing, sources said.
